At the conclusion of this activity, you should be able to:

- Articulate the medical definition of burnout, its stages, as well as the impact of unaddressed burnout on physician mental health, professionalism, patient safety and malpractice risk exposure.
- Analyze and mitigate your risk for burnout utilizing primary prevention (e.g., education, re-inventory, limit setting, trust building, organizing, prioritizing).
- Minimize the negative impacts of burnout by utilizing secondary prevention (e.g., early detection, identifying sources of stress, commitment to change, intervention).

Faculty

Ron Hofeldt, MD, is a psychiatrist in Salem, Oregon, with a private practice specializing in the treatment of physicians since 1976.
